

in the south it is common to watch the summer moon and sweat
at the same time...

the evangelists arrive with less delicate images as your clothes stick to your body...

i am struck about how they say no to most everything until it moves into things of what they need.

perhaps there is a commonality between the vine that creeps up the tree with strangulation in mind and the application of sermons that involve passing the plate.

it is easier to embrace the description of what you think you are than what you think you are not when hard money is changing hands.

at the same time.
