

alexander did not really solve the problem of the gordian knot.
he left two gordian knots
each half solved.

the anima laughed at the smallness of masculine thought.
she did not cut the knot.
she did not bother to waste time unraveling it.

she just asked whatever was knotted to get in bed and spend the night knowing that after a night with her things would work themselves out on their own...
any loose ends could wiggle their toes for more attention in the morning.

the anima laughed.
