

religion shrinks when it reaches the limits of expansion and runs into the inevitable

dead end

when it cannot keep its promises about its promises and what they mean.

if it wanted to outlast eternity

it should settle on offering suggestions

for a way

to back out when

things do not work out

or happen on time

or do not happen at all.

suggestions can

be born again

with less noise

with less drama

and no pronounced

tendencies for suicide.

the inevitable dead end.
